

Environmental Volunteers

Become a Nature Volunteer in Local Schools!
No experience needed! We train you - it's easy!

Teach kids to love nature and learning! In the classroom, the Environmental Volunteers work with small groups of children and involve them in hands-on, discovery-based learning. Using our innovative teaching materials, we teach children about Bay Area environments. On field trips, we explore local ecosystems as we reinforce concepts introduced in the classroom.

Last year we taught over 12,000 local school children, but we had to refuse hundreds more. You can be the one to say 'yes' to kids on our waiting list!

How can you become an Environmental Volunteer? Our requirements are simple; all you need is a love of children, nature, and learning! Many of our volunteers have no teaching experience or background in natural science when they first join us. Our training and mentoring programs provide you with all the skills and materials that you need to become a natural science educator.
